This is the dramatic account of the first Scandinavian attempt to find the North-West Passage. Jens Munk was born in Southern Norway in 1579. He left Norway and went into Dutch service. He first made a voyage to Brazil and spent 6 years in Bahia before returning to Copenhagen via Amsterdam. It is believed that the idea for this voyage originated from Munk himself. Both the king and the court were fully aware of what a shorter route north of America to China and India would mean for the trade, and were therefore positive to Munk's plans. There was prestige in this project and no doubt there was also some envy in looking at the recent English attempts in the region. Not least regarding Hudson's attempt, whose map of 1612 Munk probably used. The voyage was fatal. The 2 ships, with 65 persons, left Copenhagen in 1619. In Hudon Bay 62 members of the crew died and only Munk and no of his men survived. These 3 men made an astonishing deed in sailing the small vessel "Laprenen" back to Norway where it arrived on September 25th, 1620.

Die nördlichste Zeitung der Welt. Redigiert aus Spitsbergen. Erscheint jede Woche in Juli & August.

Verdens nordligste Avis. Redigeret fra Spitsbergen af Overlærer Carl Christensen, Tromsø. Udkommer en Gang ugentlig i Juli & August.

The most northern newspaper on the Globe. Edited from Spitsbergen. Weekly in the months of July and August.

No. 1 & 2 — 6 Juli 1897 — 1ste Aarg.

Det første Syn af Spitsbergen.

Julius Payer skriver om det første Syn af Vestspitsbergen under hans og Weyprechts Polarexpedition 1871 med Tromsøjagten „Isbjørnen":

„Vi forsøgte i Begyndelsen af August tre Gange at naa Storfjorden fra Vestsiden af Svålkap; men tre Gange blev vi af Strømmen førte tilbage vesterfor Svålkap trods gunstig Vind og flere Miles Fart. Denne Omstændighed forskaffede os en uventet Lejlighed til at lære at kjende den med gletscherdækkede Fjordes snykkede Vestkyst af Spitsbergen lige til i Nærheden af Hornsund. Et Taagedække, tæt som i Stenkulstiden, svævede næsten uophørligt over Hattands-Pyramiden og Hornsundstinden (4500 Fod).

Spitsbergen i Sammenligning med Grønland: „Et sandt Paradis." Kun de mange store Gletschere stod ikke i Forhold til det romantiske og malerske Syn af et livfuldt Fjeldlandskab." —

Professor B. M. Keilhau skriver 1831.*)

„ — Landet afgav det pragtfuldeste Syn. Den store Kyststrækning, som vi oversaa, fremviste overalt de stolteste Alpeformer; der var Kegler lig Rundane i Gudbrandsdalen, og Aiguiller og Tinder, som Schreckhorn og Gausta. Især var der et Fjeld ved Indløbet til Horn-Sund, som med en overraskende Lighed fremstillede Formen af Gausta, der er saa udmærket ved sin indskaarne Kam og ved Sne-Riflerne paa Nordsiden. Højden af disse Fjelde er dog vel neppe mer end 2 til 3000 Fod; men de staar umiddelbart ved Havet, og ved Refractionen synes de ofte meget høiere, end de

CAPTAIN SCOTT'S OWN STORY

TOLD FROM HIS JOURNALS

Illustrations from Photographs by H. G. PONTING, Photographer to the Expedition.

CAPTAIN SCOTT'S LAST MESSAGE.

THE facsimile overleaf of the first page of Captain Scott's Last Message to the Public is reproduced for the first time, by the kind permission of Lady Scott. It is a human document of the greatest interest to all admirers of the intrepid explorer, who will not fail to observe that, although writing in the face of certain death from exposure and starvation, he calmly and dispassionately sets forth the reasons for the failure of the Expedition in a message which to all appearances might have been written in the peaceful seclusion of his study. Surely such an instance of the power of mind over body is well-nigh unique.

MESSAGE TO THE PUBLIC.

The causes of this disaster are not due to faulty organization, but to misfortune in all risks which had to be undertaken.

1. The loss of pony transport in March, 1911, obliged me to start later than I had intended and obliged the limits of stuff transported to be narrowed.
2. The weather throughout the outward journey, and especially the long gale in 83° South, stopped us.
3. The soft snow in lower reaches of glacier again reduced pace.

We fought these untoward events with a will, and conquered, but it ate into our provision reserve.

To flight pioneer Hjalmar Riiser-Larsen regarding the first crossing of the Polar Sea. Amundsen is out on a tour giving speeches to raise money for the expedition. He tells Riiser-Larsen that he has just sent a telegram saying "85 000 dollars secured. Order two planes". The money was given by James W. Ellsworth and would be the foundation for the upcoming expedition. From this moment Riiser-Larsen was economically able to focus on the expedition only (the first crossing of the Polar Sea).

Kjære Gulbrandsen

Jeg regner med å ha manuskriptet til min nye bok ferdig omkring 14 juni hvis alt går som beregnet. Harald Grieg er bortreist såvidt jeg forstår og vil bli i Amerika en tid. Han var svært forhippen på å få satt arbeide med boken i sving, hadde jeg inntrykk av. Nå kommer jo fellesferie i juli, men det kunde vel bli noen uker i juni som trykkeriet kunde arbeide på boken? Alt dette vet du best å bedømme.

Jeg antar at boken vil bli på mellom 250 og 275 maskinskrevne sider. Jeg arbeider på heitrykk og har ingen tid til å komme ind til Oslo for konferense før jeg er ferdig. En god del av manuskripterne er oversendt Forum i Sverige som ordner med billeder, karter og annet.

Send mig noen ord er du snild så jeg får peiling på hvördan du har tenkt å legge det hele an. Det er jo også spørsmål om skrift og skytning.

Venlig hilsen

Helge Ingstad

"I have to acknowledge the reception of three letters from you, which I have not answered. Accept my most heartly thanks for all your kindness. I am an inpolite and dreadful person am I not? But forgive me, you know the reason why I do not write, I am a very poor letter writer, and I have been awfully busy with my work and partly also with my engagement. You wonder that I did not tell you anything when I was with you, but I do not wonder, the reason was that I did not know a bit of what I was going to do then, I knew her very well, but I could not believe in the possibility of seing myself as a married man, now I think it most natural, I don't understand what has made such a change in my view, perhaps the life with you and seing your happy family life. Please give my kind regards to Miss Vera, thank her most heartly for her congratulation and tell her not to be afraid. I am still going to the Pole. I thought, however, that she would enjoy my not going, as I would then leave the North Pole to an Englishman. I hope to come to Newcastle on the 10th. Please give Prof. Flover my kind regards. Dated Godhaab, Lysaker 24 October 1900.

In German. A long and important letter to Professor Ferdinand Freiherr von Richthofen [1833-1905], one of Nansen's research colleagues.

Von Richthofen was several years president for "Gesellschaft für Erdkunde" and was strongly involved in the field of deep sea and polar research. He was also founder of an institute for Oceanography, a topic Nansen is strongly discussing in this highly interesting letter. Nansen was one of the foremost oceanographs of his time and became a professor within the field i 1908. He took part in many research trips to polar seas such as Jan Mayen and Svalbard, among others on the ship "Michaels Sars", which he mentions in this letter. In the letter one also gets an understanding of Nansen's strong international contact network. Nansen even mentions Captain Scott.

Dated Sørkje 1.9.1900.

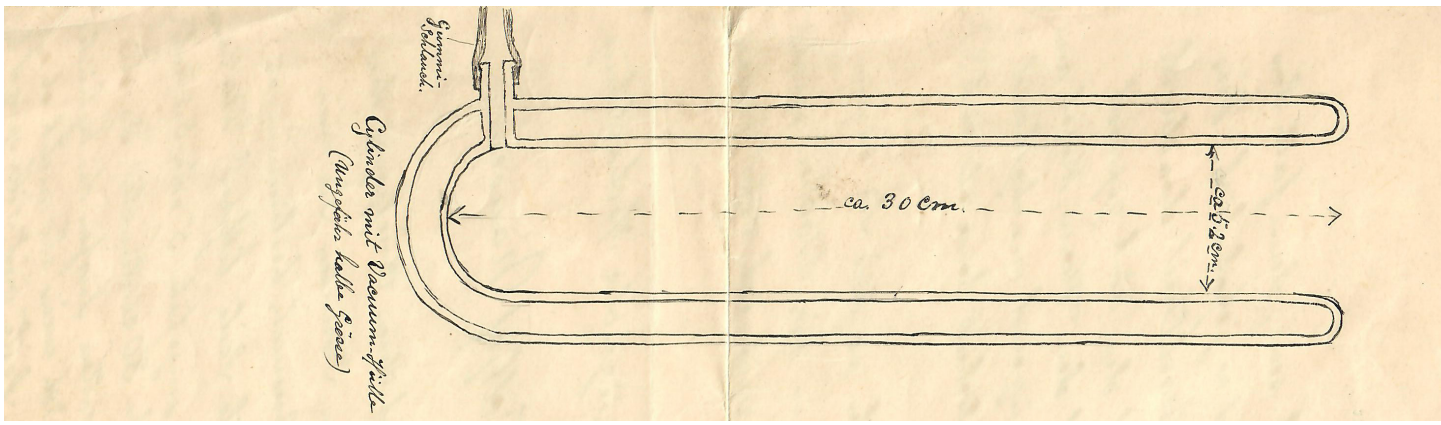

Sørkje was the estate which Nansen bought in 1899 and where he and his family spent their summers. The letter is written to a close colleague and it gives information about Nansen's work and research with the water-bottles which he designed, later known as the "Nansen-bottle". A Nansen-bottle is a device for obtaining samples of seawater at a specific depth.

Nansen writes: "[...] I have just received a letter from Pettersson asking me to tell you about the water-bottle [...]. The water-bottle worked exceedingly well except from one small irregularity with the screw-threat of the propellor which can easily be corrected for future work. Its insulation was marvellous. As far as I could make out it insulated perfectly even from 3000 meters"

Two autograph letters, signed. 5 1/2 pages. [22x14cm].
Both dated Lysaker, 18 December 1903.

One letter to, and one relating to, Bjørn Helland-Hansen.

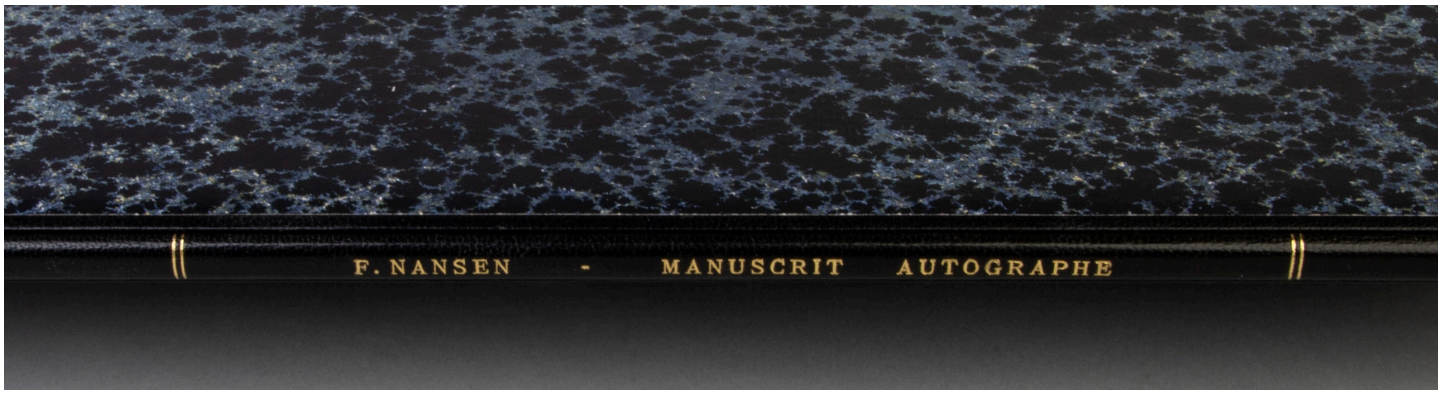

Bjørn Helland-Hansen [1877-1957] was a Norwegian pioneer of modern oceanography whose studies in the physical structure and dynamics of the oceans were instrumental in transforming oceanography from a science that was mainly descriptive to one based on the principles of physics and chemistry.

One letter is a recommendation for Bjørn Helland Hansen, sent to "Bestyrelsen af A.L Hansen's Legat". Nansen writes that Helland-Hansens research "[...] kan komme til stor nytte i en fremtidig havbiologisk-kemisk forskning. Det gjælder her opgaver som mer og mer påtrængende kræver løsning, spørgsmal som er af den største betydning for hele havets biologiske husholdning."

In the letter to Helland-Hansen, Nansen informs him about the recommendation letter he has sent. He also gives a very interesting insight into his own work at that time: "Nu anser jeg strømmalingsspørgsmalet for løst, og vil snart kunne anbefale, håber jeg, fuldt tilfredsstillende metoder, selv for dybt hav [...] Jeg skal nu til med for alvor at tegne korter og snit til afhandlingen til reporten, 1900, men hvad målestok? Autograph letter, signed. 4 pages. [28x20cm].
Dated Lysaker, August 8, 1918.

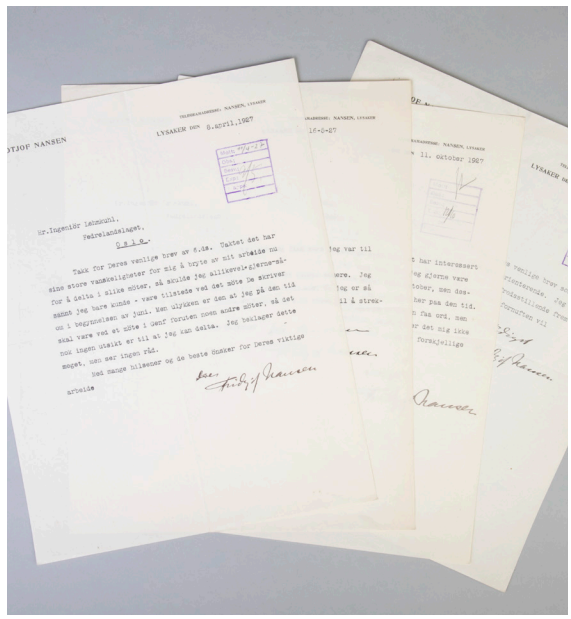

This letter is written to a close colleague and shows Nansen's deep involvement and passion for research and results: "Men jeg synes nok det hele begynder at ta bedre form nu [...]. Hadde vi bare set sa klart fra begynnelsen av, skulde vi fått endnu bedre fast plan i det hele og i vor hele fremstilling; men det kan jo [...] være en styrke ved vort arbeide også, at det netop ikke er bygget efter noen forutfattet plan eller mening for at bevise noe bestemt, men de endelige klare resultater er kommet mens arbeidet [...] er krystaliseret sej ut av stofmængden."

Between 1908-1930 Nansen was a professor of oceanography at the Royal Frederick University in Oslo and did extensive research into the behaviour and origin of ocean currents.

Fridtjof Nansen and former Prime Minister Christian Michelsen, Lehmkuhl's uncle, were among the founders. The purpose of the organization was to gather the right wing in Norwegian politics and create a bourgeois front against the emerging socialism.

Expedition diary May 20. 1888 – August 14. 1888.
Diary notes, observations, sketches and drawings [many coloured] in Nansen's hand.
Note book, Henry Penny-S. Patent. Silver clasp. 124pp + free end papers. [7,5x12cm].

From his first expedition, crossing the Greenland ice from east to west in 1888. This first actual expedition of Fridtjof Nansen became very important in many ways. He gained extensive experience in Arctic conditions, not least by spending the winter among the Inuit people. By this Norwegian expedition succeeding in crossing the ice sheet, it was to become decisive for himself as a polar explorer.

Scientifically, the biologist Nansen collected samples from the inland ice ridge to be able to prove the former seabed, and thus confirm the theory that the land mass had risen from the sea. He also made observations of biology, geology and weather as well as recording coastal stretches.

Nansen wrote several diaries on the expedition. He has in principle divided the diaries according to stages of the journey. This diary runs from the end of May to the middle of August 1888, the period from the stay in Dynafjord in Iceland to the landing on the east coast of Greenland. The diary begins at the entrance to Isafjord in Iceland. Several beautiful sketches and descriptions can be found from the geological reconnaissance trip in Dynafjord.

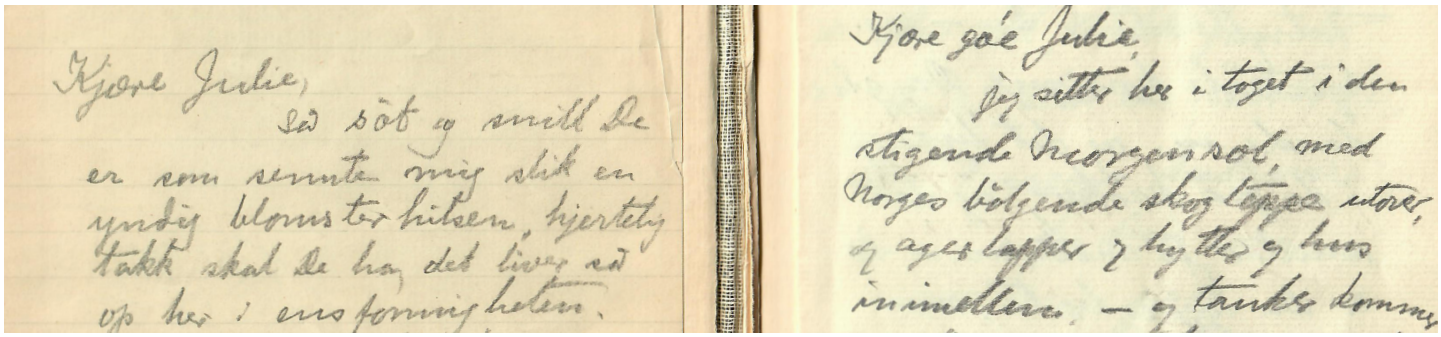

The crossing of the ice mass off the east coast of Greenland is perhaps the largest achievment on this expedition.

In Nansen's book about the Greenland voyage, The First crossing of Greenland, this stage of the expedition is described in chapters IV, V, VII-IX, XI-XIII. The original diary naturally gives a different picture of the trip than the book does. Authenticity flows from the densely written pages. It's almost like you smell the contrast between the clear air outside and the strong stench among 60 men inside Jason. You can imagine the large masses of ice with seals that must be forced by boat and sledge and feel the eternal rocking ice beneath you. The diaries from immediately before and after this diary that we have described here are kept in the National Library. Norland's part excels in its sketches and drawings, several of which are in color.

Otto Norland, living in London, was made aware of this by his brother and contacted rare book dealer Claes Nyegaard to buy this on his behalf. It turned out that the diary was found among many other things in a basement in a house on Romerike, which Nansen had had to his disposal for a period of time.

2 autograph letters + 2 calling card notes + typed and signed letter.

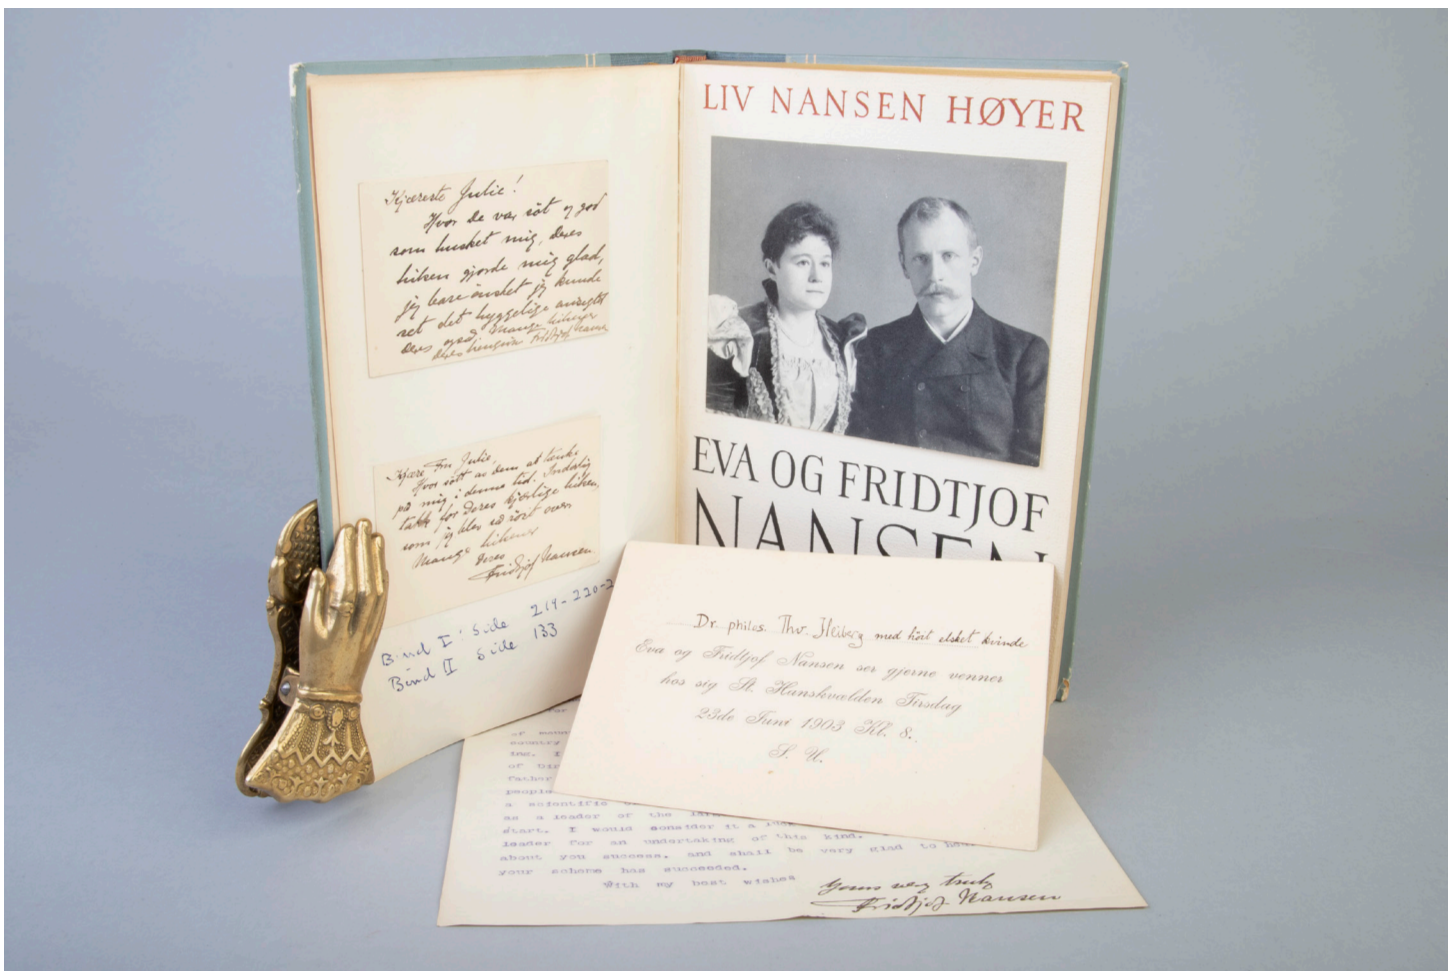

Warm and lovingly handwritten letters and calling cards for Julie Heiberg. She was married to Thorvald Heiberg, son of Axel Heiberg, co-financer of the expeditions of Nansen and Sverdrup to Greenland. The typed letter is for Thorvald Heiberg, as a respond for him asking Nansen for recommendation for a trip to England to rase money for his water-power plans.

The letters and calling cards for Julie Heiberg are pasted into the book Eva and Fridtjof Nansen (1954), written by Liv Nansen Høyer. The book is INSCRIBED by Liv Nansen Høyer to Julie and Thorvald Heiberg. LAID IN: Invitation card [June 23, 1903], from Eva and Fridtjof Nansen for Dr. Philos Thv. Heiber with his highly beloved woman [not wife!].

In the letters to Julie, Nansen writes in an unusual soft and gentle tone. "I must send you a greeting with thanks for the short minutes we spent together, so unexpected and pleasant". "You are enchanting, as a light beam you come sliding in, lighting up even the grey corners, and it smiles towards you". Nansen's relation to Julie Heiberg is described on pp. 219-221 in the book. It mentions a an occasion when there was held a party for Prince Eugen, and Nansen took Julie Heiberg, the youngest person present, as his guest at the table. Julie danced with the Prince and Nansen all night.

My dear Sir Lewis

It has occurred to me that it would be an act of wisdom to leave somewhere in England a document dealing with the various possibilities which may interfere with the working of my programme.
Such a document might be useful to allay public anxiety as well as to indicate the direction in which action might be taken should the Terra Nova fail to return from the ice at the appointed dates.
The question arises as to with whom the statement should be left and every consideration points to you if you will accept. It is essential it should be in the hands of some polar authority.

As the Mother of Capt. Scott I feel I must tell you even in the midst of my crushing grief, how much we sympathise in your son's fine efforts to take relief to our dear ones on returning from the South. That they were no avail, was the force of circumstances and we feel that everything was done that could be. [...] The much to be envied Mother of a living Son, who will be returning to you, & be your joy & comfort as mine was".

The news of the disaster to Scott & his companions did not reach Europe till February 1913 – when the sea& the bodies were found 8 months later. A Memorial Service had been held in St. Paul's on Feb. 14, the day before Mrs Scott's letter. Cherry-Garrard, early in March 1912, set out alone with dog-teams and a Russian dog-driver to speed the return of the polar party but a four days blizzard at One Ton Depot forced his return. He was a member of the search party which found the bodies of Scott, Wilson & Bowers who had died within only 11 miles of One Ton Depot & learned then of Oates self-sacrifice & Petty Officer Evans earlier collapse. Cherry-Garrard never ceased to reproach himself for not having continued.
